TST ACADEMIC WRITING PROGRAM 2022

This online course is specifically designed to assist TST graduate students, especially but not exclusively those studying in English as a second language, to enhance their academic writing skills. The aim of this non-credit course, offered within TST's language sequence, is to help students complete their degree on schedule, and to reduce the editing and writing instruction between supervisors and supervisees.

The course is limited to twelve students and may be taken at any stage of the student's academic career, including while they are writing their thesis.

This course will focus on developing the academic writing skills necessary for graduate study at TST especially for doctoral study. Specifically, students will learn how to understand, summarize, respond to, and integrate graduate-level texts (from academic journals, field-specific articles, and books) into their own research and writing their dissertation, research papers, articles, and conference papers. The course will provide students with the academic skills to write in their own voice while following the academic conventions of the field and prepare them both for their dissertation and post-doctoral academic endeavours. In addition, the course provides a comprehensive review of the essential grammar for research writing with a specific focus on style in academic writing.
