“Theological understanding is not a theory or invention, something wafted into existence by the theologian’s magic wand. It names a dimension of the life of faith itself, the understanding required of faith as it exists in various life contexts…”

Edward Farley

“. . . there are no facts, only interpretations.”

Friedrich Nietzsche

“Hermeneutics operates whenever what is said is not immediately intelligible.”

Hans-Georg Gadamer

Course Description

This course examines resources and methods in constructive theological reflection, focusing on hermeneutics as a strategic way of thinking about the role of texts and traditions in doing theology. Attention is given to philosophical and contextual interpretation theories in conjunction with liberal, postliberal, and postmodern theological methodologies. The aim is to better understand how theological sources, processes, criteria, and aims are determined and become reflected in specific theological formulations—for instance, regarding the character of faith, authority, revelation, rational reflection, social justice, cultural contexts, intercultural and postcolonial dynamics, and religious pluralism.

Required Texts (available at Crux Books)

- Porter, Stanley E. and Jason C. Robinson, Hermeneutics: An Introduction to Interpretive Theory (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 2011)
- Schreiter, Robert J. The New Catholicity: Theology between the Global and the Local (Maryknoll, NY: Orbis, 2005)

Other required readings shall be available on library reserve or provided online at the class website on the Portal.
Recommended Texts

- Tanner, Catherine. Theories of Culture: A New Agenda for Theology (Minneapolis: Fortress, 1997)

Learning Outcomes

Upon completion of this class, students should be able to…

1. Articulate key components in theological reflection.
2. Demonstrate knowledge of methodological questions and issues in theology.
3. Discuss in some depth the character of hermeneutics, both philosophical and theological.
4. Identify approaches and developments in hermeneutical theory, noting theological applications.
5. Convey the salient features of (and differences between) liberal, liberation, feminist, postliberal, and postcolonial theological hermeneutics.
6. Appreciate the importance of context and culture for constructive theology.
7. Display familiarity with postmodern, intercultural and pluralist challenges for theology.
8. Consider theological reflection as a vehicle for promoting right relations and for cultivating shalom.
9. Explore in greater analytic detail aspects of theological method and be able to explain basic choices for interpretation, including evidences and ranges of uncertainty/ambiguity in referencing them.
10. Exhibit the capacity to participate as a citizen in a theological community:
    - demonstrating empathetic and critical thinking in reading, speaking, and writing…
    - communicating responsibly, carefully, and clearly…
    - framing and developing theological arguments supported with evidence…
    - showing an awareness of oneself as an interpreter…
    - displaying a tolerance for ambiguity while remaining genuinely committed

Class-Time Format

The basic arrangement of time in class will be that of lecture-presentation-discussion. Mainly, the course will operate in a seminar format, oriented toward discussing texts and themes in an interactive and open environment. Lectures will be offered occasionally to introduce, help clarify, and expand the context and substance of topics/materials. Class presentations from students will provide a way to introduce the readings and ask key questions to generate discussion (see Course Requirements, below, for more information).
Course Requirements and Assignments

1. Class Attendance and Participation................................. 25%
2. Class Presentation.......................................................... 25%
3. Research Paper.............................................................. 50%

1. Regular attendance and informed participation in class is an important part of the learning experience. Because discussion is a key part of the class, nurturing an engagement with course materials, your questions and comments are valued and will be a factor in the overall grade. Readings for each class will be discussed on the basis of student questions and classroom interaction in response to presentations and/or lectures. To this end, it is expected that you will have done the readings, critically reflected upon them, and be prepared to contribute substantively. Careful reading is fundamental to informed participation. More than three absences may result in loss of course credit.

2. Class Presentation. At each class session, one or more students, by pre-arrangement with the instructor, will initiate discussion by referring to salient points in the week’s reading assignments and raising two or three questions to generate conversation over important issues/themes in readings. The student(s) should address the class for approximately twenty minutes.

3. A final research paper, 20-25 pages in length, is due no later than Tuesday, December 15. This paper should focus on a topic or issue germane to the course and investigate, analyze, and appraise its implications for theological method and hermeneutics. The assignment is both integrative and research oriented; it offers the flexibility to research a topic or issue of interest to the student, while also requiring the student to assess the relevance of the research to some of the materials read/discussed during the semester, drawing conclusions in the process. It should thus explore in greater analytic detail at least one aspect of theological method and be able to explain the interpretive choices made in the process.

Paper assignments should be clearly organized, well-documented, critical in scope, substantive in analysis and in assessing materials, careful in formulating evaluative claims, and prudent in applications. Excellent papers will not simply ‘state’ but ‘show’ their case. Based upon an informed consideration of what is at stake, excellent papers will provide reasons for claims and back up these reasons with solid evidence, noting the ranges of uncertainty and/or ambiguity in referencing them.

Papers should observe Emmanuel College academic regulations and policies, and note the “Other Qualities Expected of Students” in “The T.S.T. Grading Scale Used at Emmanuel College” for criteria for evaluation of assignments (found in 2006-07 edition of Handbook of Information for Basic Degree Students). More information about writing papers can be found at the web site “Writing at the University of Toronto” at www.utoronto.ca/writing/.
